DIFFICULT TOPICS WITH STUDENTS

TEACHING TOLERANCE
A PROJECT OF THE SOUTHERN POVERTY LAW CENTER

ABOUT TEACHING TOLERANCE

Founded in 1991, Teaching Tolerance is dedicated to reducing prejudice, improving intergroup relations and supporting equitable school experiences for our nation's children.

The program provides free educational materials, including a K-12 anti-bias curriculum: Perspectives for a Diverse America. Teaching Tolerance magazine is sent to over 400,000 educators, reaching nearly every school in the country. Tens of thousands of educators use the program's film kits, and more than 7,000 schools participate in the annual Mix It Up at Lunch Day program.

Teaching Tolerance materials have won two Oscars, an Emmy and dozens of REVERE Awards from the Association of American Publishers, including two Golden Lamp Awards, the industry's highest honor. The program's website and social media pages offer thought-provoking news, conversation and support for educators who care about diversity, equal opportunity and respect for differences in schools.

ABOUT THIS GUIDE

Educators play a crucial role in helping students talk openly about the historical roots and contemporary manifestations of social inequality and discrimination. Learning how to communicate about such topics as white privilege, police violence, economic inequality and mass incarceration requires practice, and facilitating difficult conversations demands courage and skill—regardless of who we are, our intentions or how long we’ve been teaching.

Use the strategies in this resource as you prepare to facilitate difficult conversations about race and racism. You can also use them to build competency when discussing other types of discrimination, such as gender bias, ableism, and religious or anti-LGBT persecution. We hope you find the resource useful, and that you will share it with colleagues. And don’t forget to check out the list of additional PD suggestions and classroom activities starting on page 13.

PREPARE YOURSELF

ASSESS YOUR COMFORT LEVEL

Many educators avoid talking about race and racism. It's uncomfortable, may lead to conflict, and calls for skills few of us possess. Often, this avoidance comes down to a fear of misspeaking, sounding racist or unintentionally doing harm.

Part of getting students ready to talk about race and racism is to first deal with our own fears. Before initiating a classroom discussion, do a simple self-assessment.

Consider the following statements and select the one that best describes how you feel.

I would rather not talk about race/racism.

I am very uncomfortable talking about race/racism.

I am usually uncomfortable talking about race/racism.

I am sometimes uncomfortable talking about race/racism.

I am usually comfortable talking about race/racism.

I am very comfortable talking about race/racism.

Then use a sentence-stem activity to self-reflect.

The hard part of talking about race/racism is ...

The beneficial part of talking about race/racism is ...

After reflecting on your own comfort level, think about how you will stay engaged when the topic of race arises.

- Do you feel ill-prepared to talk about race and racism? If so, commit to learning more about the issues by studying history, following current events and brushing up on anti-racism work.
- Do you reroute classroom discussions when you sense discomfort in the room? If so, commit to riding out the discussion next time.
- Do you feel isolated in your teaching about race and racism? If so, commit to identifying a colleague with whom you can co-teach, plan or debrief.

- Do you worry about your ability to answer students' questions about race and racism? If so, commit to accepting that you don't have all the answers and embracing the opportunity to learn with your students.

FIND COMFORT IN DISCOMFORT

Teaching about structural inequality such as racism requires courage—from you and from your students. It's normal to feel discomfort as you reflect on your own experiences with racial inequality and deepen your understanding of racism. But the more you practice facilitating difficult conversations, the more you'll be able to manage the discomfort. The conversations may not necessarily get easier, but your ability to press toward more meaningful dialogue will expand. Stay engaged; the journey is worth the effort.

Being uncomfortable should not mean being unsafe, if it can be avoided. As a class, establish classroom norms that include a list of specific words and phrases that students commit to not using. The list might include calling people's opinions "stupid" or "lame," saying, "That's so gay!" or using the n-word or the r-word.

Students can create and sign a contract of norms and behaviors that define the classroom community as a socially and emotionally safe place. The contract might include such statements as "Try to understand what someone is saying before rushing to judgment" or "Put-downs of any kind are never OK." If the conversation becomes very personal, you may want to establish structures for allowing students to share experiences—uninterrupted—without response from other students. (See our resource on Serial Testimony for more information: tolerance.org/meaningful-discussions.)

Pre-established norms or a contract can help students support a healthy classroom environment and reduce the likelihood that you will have to intervene.

BE VULNERABLE

Avoiding conversations about race and racism can arise from our own fears of being vulnerable. As you prepare to engage students in difficult conversations, consider this question: What will a discussion about race and racism potentially expose about me?

Use the graphic organizer Difficult Conversations: A Self-Assessment (found on page 18) to list three vulnerabilities that you worry could limit your effectiveness. Next, identify three strengths that you believe will help you lead open and honest dialogues. Finally, list specific needs that, if met, would improve your ability to facilitate difficult conversations.

ADDRESS STRONG EMOTIONS

Students' reactions to talking about race and racism will vary. They may react passively, show sorrow, express anger or respond unpredictably. Some students may become visibly upset; others may push back against discussing these topics in class. Many of these reactions stem from feelings such as pain, anger, confusion, guilt, shame and the urge to blame others.

Seeing members of the class respond emotionally may elicit reactions from you or other students. Guilt and shame can lead to crying that may immobilize conversation. Anger might lead to interruptions, loud talking, sarcasm or explicit confrontations—all of which can impede important dialogue. Your role is to remain calm and assess the situation. If the tension in the room appears to be prompting dialogue and learning, continue to monitor, but let the conversation play out. If the tension boils over in confrontation that jeopardizes student safety (emotional or otherwise), take steps to diffuse the situation.

Refer back to Difficult Conversations: A Self-Assessment. How can the strengths you listed calm students and diffuse tension, yet avoid shutting down the conversation? Spend some time thinking ahead about how you will react to strong emotions.

Use the strategies in Responding to Strong Emotions (found on page 19) to develop a plan. You know your students; consider the emotional responses likely to emerge. Add others you think might emerge, and list potential response strategies.

Planning ahead and establishing a safe space within your classroom should diminish students' discomfort. It's important to note, however, that for some students—particularly members of marginalized, nondominant or targeted identity groups—you may not be able to provide complete safety. It's also true that overemphasizing identity safety runs the risk of minimizing the diverse realities of our students' lived experiences both in and outside school. In addition to providing safety for your students, build their resilience and strength so they will be more willing to take the risks involved with feeling uncomfortable.

PLAN FOR STUDENTS

To facilitate difficult conversations with your students, equip them with strategies they can use to persevere during difficult conversations. Here are some pedagogical approaches to help students learn to sit with their discomfort and to moderate it over time. The approaches outlined here are for students in grades 6–12. Suggested adaptations to each strategy for grades K–5 are listed separately.

STRATEGY ONE: REITERATE→CONTEMPLATE→RESPIRE→COMMUNICATE

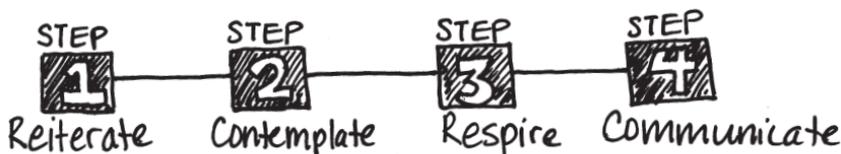

Explain these steps as a way to communicate while feeling difficult emotions. These steps won't prevent or change the emotions students may feel, but they can help them self-regulate.

Step 1: Reiterate. Restate what you heard. This step enables students to reflect on what they have heard as opposed to what they think they may have heard. Repeating what they have heard limits miscommunication and misinformation.

Step 2: Contemplate. Count to 10 before responding. Students can think about their responses and use the time to compose what they want to say. Taking time to think about their responses helps move students away from immediate emotional responses that can potentially derail the conversation.

Step 3: Respire. Take a breath to check in with yourself. Suggesting students take a few breaths before responding may help them settle their thoughts and emotions during difficult conversations.

Step 4: Communicate. Speak with compassion and thoughtfulness. Students should do their best to speak as they want to be spoken to, assuming good intentions and seeking understanding. Explain that when they disagree with something someone has said, they should focus on challenging the statement rather than the person who said it.

STRATEGY TWO: CHECK IN WITH STUDENTS

Staying on top of the emotional temperature in the classroom and checking in with students about how they are feeling helps you know when to stop and address strong emotions. Checking in nonverbally to gauge students' comfort levels allows all students to participate without being singled out or put on the spot. Try these ideas.

Fist-to-Five. You can quickly gauge a number of things—readiness, mood, comprehension—by asking students to give you a “fist-to-five” signal with their hands.

Fist = I am very uncomfortable and cannot move on.

1 Finger = I am uncomfortable and need some help before I can move on.

2 Fingers = I am a little uncomfortable, but I want to try to move on.

3 Fingers = I am not sure how I am feeling.

4 Fingers = I am comfortable enough to move on.

5 Fingers = I am ready to move on full steam ahead!

Stoplight. Use the colors of a traffic light to signal student readiness and comfort. Throughout the discussion, you can ask students if they are green, yellow or red. Students can also use the “red light” to request a break or a stop when they are feeling strong emotions or have been uncomfortably triggered.

Green = I am ready to go on.

Yellow = I can go on, but I feel hesitant about moving forward.

Red = I do not want to go on right now.

STRATEGY THREE: ALLOW TIME AND SPACE TO DEBRIEF

Everyone engaged in an emotionally charged conversation needs to allow for the safe “discharge” of emotions before leaving the classroom. Provide the opportunity for students to debrief what they are learning and their experience of learning it. Depending on your group, you may want to devote a portion of each lesson—half a class period or an entire class—to debrief and reflect. Try these ideas.

Talking Circles. Gather in a circle and create, or review, the norms that will help build trust. Select a significant object as a talking piece that allows participants to engage equally in the discussion. Whoever holds the talking piece can speak, while the rest of the circle listens supportively. Pose a question or statement to begin. It can be as simple as “How do you feel about today’s lesson?” As the facilitator or circle keeper, you will participate as an equal member of the group. As students become familiar with the process, consider inviting them to be circle keepers.*

* Amy Vathe Bintliff, “Talking Circles for Restorative Justice and Beyond” tolerance.org/blog/talking-circles-restorative-justice-and-beyond Journaling. Personal reflection through writing can be extremely effective for debriefing after difficult conversations. Journaling helps students process their emotions on their own terms and at their own pace. Decide whether journals will be kept private or serve as a space for you to dialogue with students by writing back and forth.

K-5 ADAPTATIONS

Try these modifications and adaptations to the strategies for grades K-5.

K-5 STRATEGY ONE: REITERATE→CONTEMPLATE→RESPIRE→COMMUNICATE

Explain the steps in age-appropriate language: repeat, think, breathe and feel. Use symbols and words to help students visualize and demonstrate the communication expectations. Practice and model expectations several times before engaging students.

Step 1: Repeat
Say it again.

Step 2: Think
Count 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

Step 3: Breathe
In through the nose;
out through the mouth.

Step 4: Feel Put yourself in their shoes.

K-5 STRATEGY TWO: CHECK IN WITH STUDENTS

Fist-to-Five works well with many K–5 students; however, consider using the simpler Thumbs Up/Thumbs Down when first introducing the strategy.

Thumbs Down =
Whoa! That doesn't feel good.

Thumbs to the Side = Huh? I need some help.

Thumbs Up = I am ready! Let's go!

Similar to Stoplight, the Thumbs Up/Thumbs Down strategy gives students a manipulative to safely interrupt difficult conversations when they might not have the courage to do so verbally.

K-5 STRATEGY THREE: ALLOW TIME AND SPACE TO DEBRIEF

Role-playing with puppets. Puppets allow students to communicate playfully and safely. Create a space for students to talk using puppets or other play objects. Children can ask questions through the puppets and may be less likely to feel uncomfortable disclosing uncertainties. Students can engage in puppet play alone, with a partner or in small groups.

Drawing. Like journaling for older students, drawing can provide young students a valuable opportunity for personal reflection and emotional processing. Drawings can be shared or kept private.

TAKE CARE OF YOURSELF

Facilitating difficult conversations can be emotionally draining or even painful for teachers. Make time to process, reflect and recharge in positive ways. Find colleagues or friends who can listen while you debrief conversations about race and racism. Take advantage of professional learning communities where you can discuss the dynamics in your classroom. Keep a professional journal and use writing to process and reflect.

Use Responding to Strong Emotions to think ahead about how you can create emotional safety in your classroom. The suggested strategies are general; use your knowledge of yourself, your students and your classroom culture to create a specific and personalized plan.

DIFFICULT CONVERSATIONS: A SELF-ASSESSMENT

VULNERABILITIES	STRENGTHS	NEEDS
EXAMPLE: “My children are multiracial. Can I be objective?” “I don’t know enough about the issues described here. Am I ‘allowed’ to lead a discussion while I also learn?”	EXAMPLE: “I have good rapport with my students.” “I use community resources to support learning.”	EXAMPLE: “I need to learn more information about sex, gender and gender expression.” “I need clearer ground rules for class discussions.”

RESPONDING TO STRONG EMOTIONS

EMOTION	STRATEGIES TO USE IN THE MOMENT	YOUR PLAN
Pain/ Suffering/ Anger	Check in with the students. Model the tone of voice you expect from students. If crying or angry students want to share what they are feeling, allow them to do so. If they are unable to contribute to the class discussion, respectfully acknowledge their emotions and continue with the lesson.
Blame	Remind students that racism is like smog. We all breathe it in and are harmed by it. They did not create the system, but they can contribute to its end.
Guilt	Have students specify what they feel responsible for. Make sure that students are realistic in accepting responsibility primarily for their own actions and future efforts, even while considering the broader past actions of their identity groups.
Shame	Encourage students to share what is humiliating or dishonorable. Ask questions that offer students an opportunity to provide a solution to the action, thought or behavior perpetuating their belief.
Confusion or Denial	When students appear to be operating from a place of misinformation or ignorance about a particular group of people, ask questions anchored in class content or introduce accurate and objective facts for consideration.
